***EMPLOYEE FEATURE***

Dr. Frank Lovrich is this months employee feature. He has had a colorful past as a professional baseball player and a coach before becoming a professor of Sociology.

Lovrich is a full-time instructor in Criminal Justice and Sociology. However, in 1983 he assumed the additional duties of Assistant for Institutional Planning and Development. His responsibilities include serving as the liaison between the university and the Alabama Commission of Higher Education, the preparation of a five year plan, development of a data bank, and the preparation of demographic materials. According to Lovrich he loves teaching, but enjoys the research and challenge that he has from this job.

As the father of two sons who play college baseball for Jacksonville State, he attends most of their games and acts as a sideline coach and fan.

Outside of Education he enjoys farming and is known as a "Gentlemen Farmer". He and his wife reside in the country and she is also a teacher.
